Commission stalls on leavers: doubt Tameside inquiry by Lucy Holges

The Equal Opportunities Commis-sion's investigation into alleged dis-trimination an Tameside, which was begut in the alternath of the legal "I was done without any regord to and addition were retaining for area." and political wrongle over retaining sex or orea." Many more come to nothing.

The commission is helieved to be finding it difficult to establish any elear-cut discrimutation ogainst girls in the revised scheme of education hich was rushed through by the new Conservative authority after its proposal to retain selective schools was upheld by the Law Lords,

A spokesmen said the Holl dreision was not regarded as a precedent. The tribunal had decided on the nurticular circumstances of un in-dividual pupil and the rule applied only to him. Tha busis of the rule is that lesvers who have a commitment to return to school, if only for a day, to take examinations, are still tied into the education system and therefure not available for work. The Hull pupil had taken a part-time join-which he has given up following the tribunal's verticit, because it pays less than the benefit aftar it was begun. It is believed the commission has been busy taking coonsel's advico.

The inquiry was sat up lost Sep-tember following complaints from parents in Tameside, Greater Mouchester, about the hurriedly revised schome uf education. Under this schome uf education. Under this one boys' groomar school was re-tained and one mixed grommor school. Parents were invited tu upply for the schools and 132 hoys and 99 girls were selected out of applications from about 375 boys and 195 girls.

Tumeside is odumont that in did not discriminole in its selection procedures. Mr. Donold Thorpe, princedures. Mr Donoid Thorpe, education committee chultman, orgues: "We don't feel we com-mitted ony discrimination. Many people questioned whether the "introverted societal suructure" of 11 to 18 schools prepared young people for adult life or higher education as adequorely as did tho nore solult atmosphere in sixth-form colleges. The belief that working class 16-year-olds would leave rather thest transfer to a separate subtunion did not seem to be well founded. AN OPEN LETTER TO THE INNER LONDON EDUCATION AUTHORITY SACKING TEACHERS WON'T END THE TYNDALE AFFAIR

No one who has studied this complex affair can deny that the ILEA shares the blame for the dispute at William Tyndale Junior School.

It is grossly unfair for one party to the dispute (the iLEA) to single out another party (the teachers) and give them the extreme penalty.

Moreover, this action will prove counter-productive. For, while it may appear to deal the death blow to the matter, it will have the very opposite effect. Many people, especially teachers in London, already know enough about this case for a sense of injustice and bitterness to spread. It will not need the bureaucracy of a trade union to encourage the growing feeling of sympathy for these teachers.

We, the undersigned, call upon the ILEA, even at this late stage, to admit their own responsibility in this unfortunate affair and to adopt a more imaginative attitude towards the Tyndale teachers' undoubted energy, skill and commitment.

We believe that the ILEA is big enough to be able to find a place where these teachers can continue to pursue their commitment to the disadvantaged child and where they will be able to foster links with the community without a campaign being mounted against ter had only come to help. At this point the heedmistress stopped her account : there was considerable noise from the normally quiet corridor. Lond shouts and protesting were audible. The mother had arrived. The hesd, con-siderably disturbed, demended to know how the waman had known about the meeting.

To this end, we urge the iLEA to reinstate the Tyndale teachers immediately.

The community relations officer answered: he lind tolu her. As we all knew, he had been visited by the mather, who had usked him to stiend the niest ing. He had not reulized that the had not been invited ton. He had ossumed from his experience at tribunnls and the like thet parents would attend euromstically. The volume of noise from outside Increosed. The hend usked whether the community relations officer would like to talk to the mother and explain the situation. He left the roam.

In the full following his exir, the hend-mistress voiced her opinion that his presence at the meeting was perhaps " sume-what unfortunate ". No one elsa spoke.

We could hear that the mother had not yet bean plucated. The meating's chairmon, the oducation officer, wondored whother it might not be appropriate for the chief educational asychologist to help culm her down. He too then left the room The noise, hnwever, continued. Finally, with undorstandable reluciance, the head horself left the meeting to tolk to the mother.

After some five minutes, during which the noiso hegan to dhululsh, the chief educetional nsychologist returned, proferring the view that tho mother was cloorly n need of in-patient psychlatric help. He wes soon joined by the headmistrees end, school, that Sandra had been insulted, the tians officer. The mother had agreed, he fight hud not heen af her making, her sistical told us, to wait quietly outside to heer pupile on their way home from school. the outcome of the meeting. Discussion began sgain.

Our chief educationel psycholagist began to expend on his judgment of the mather : in the light of what he had seen of her, it seemed clear 10 him thet she could nat possibly be fit to have control over her children. The girle abould be taken into care; the femily must already be well known to sociel services.

The department's representative replied that they had na records of the femily, and that she cauld see no substantiated evidence to justify cere proceedings. The community relations officer ogreed. The family seemed to him, from his short acquaimonca with them, to be well ordered. The mather had no complaints obout her daughters' behaviour at hame.

He went on to take issue with the chief educational psychologist's view of her mentol state. In his experience she was quite typical of West Ludian mathers. She was neither mentally disturbed nor horduring on violence : she was just expressing her angor ond distress in the valuable monner guite uevol nmong West Indian women.

The headmistress felt mable to agroe. In her long experience of deoling with West Indion mothors she had very rorely encountered such extreme hehaviour. Such outbursts represented a real threat to the orderly running of her school.

The important question, we agreed, wos whether or not the mother's reaction could be described na irrailonol. We considered her erguments. Had the head hoen justified in taking action on an incident which took ploce out of school, eftar hours? Clearly she fell fully justi-fled : she hed been under considerable after o brief pause, the commuolty rela- pressure that term from local residents, pupile on their way home from school. Her school had a duty to its local comnıunity.

It was pointed out by the chlof education welfere officer that by the chief educa-tion welfere officer that the police, tha guerdians of public order, had not wiehed to take action. The heed insisted, in reply, that the school must bo free to take action over any behaviour which reflected on the school, wharever it accurred.

We moved on. The community relations officer wondered whether the nother's anger at her exclusion from the meeting was really surprising or irrationsl. Surely, the head countered, any reason-able parent would accept that this kind of meeting of concerned professionels would endeevour to act in the hest inter-ests in their children ? It wus obviously no Ster Chamber. I suggested thot might well appear to he just that to the mother. The insjority felt that this was extremely anlikely.

Time was pressing. The head expressed her unxiety that the mather should be nut of the school buildings before the snil of morning lessons. What was to be dono with Sandra and Dorcen ? flod the headmistress, the community rolations officer enquired, understoad the mather's naziety? The head felt she hod: the mother was worried about her daughters being excluded from the school and wanted them token back.

This was not what he had under-stooil. In his intervisw with her, sho had said thet she hod uo wieh for hor daughters to return to that school. Indeed elle had nircady applied to heve them transferred. Her fealings arose from anger at what she saw to be the injustice end insult of their suspension, and from the feer that they would be eccapted back into a school she believed to be victimizing them.

The education officer intervened. The issue then wes simply where the girls should be trensferred to. It was egreed. The meeting relexed. Tha elder sister would simply he asked to leave. The younger sister could he trensferred. The decisions teken, the meeting ended.

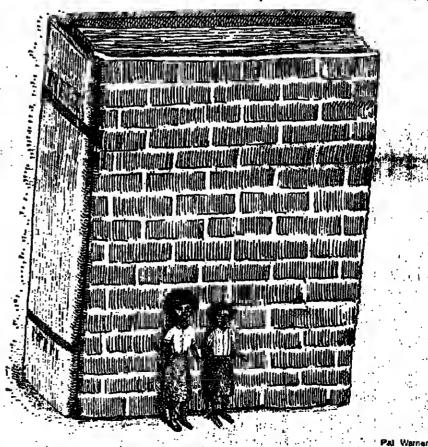

The mother left the school talking loudly to the community reletions officer, her exit shedowed by anxious ceretakers. I gethered afterwards that sha was still sanery at the way the school had treated

Dorothy Heathcote's opinions about teacher training methods ore not colcolated to loake her popular with tha establishment. Colleges of education, she says, should be places where you learn, not your solijcet, but how to teech it. Stulents, she believes, cannot learn how to hondle the role of tencher when they are themselves still " papils " for tha greater part of their courses ; tutors cannot teach hnw to teach when they no longer have to put their skills in the test in schools,

Most controversial of all, she thinks particulor more should accent complete responsibility for the training of smoll numbers of students. She would like to turn schools into "real places", where a resource like a loboretory or a theatre should be an information centre, so that children could become experts in areas of their chnice. Obsession, she says, should be encournged so that children would "find out less and know more". Dorothy Heathcore is full of aphorisms like that.

They ore encouraged to work on projects, for exemple on the history of the college, on local sociol servicos, end old paople's memorios. On this lest topic they got procticol help from a smell group of pen-sloners, who come in for o woekly Eng-lish cless, but also spond time talking with the students about their lives, nest with the students about their lives, pest end present.

But community owarences is not just a gincetion of finding out what goes on in Hockney. Judith Hinman underlines o further aspect of the tcochers' rolo: "We try to eogender criticol ettitudes obout how institutious ere operation, and obout that care provided. But we elso have to enable the students to be positive egents for chonge from within."

It can perhaps be tricky to belence commitment to community regeneration with the need to ellow students to make the finel choice of whet they want to do. For exemple, Hackney has as many es 32 children's homes, cetering for the enormous number put into cara. Even in euch a multi-recial aree, West Indlen children are over-represented. I liked this tradition of the last year pupils clifting and taking in the first year clifting. At the end of the school tear the first-fornters recipincated by giving presents to the lads and girls heaving school and wishing them well.

While the children were allowed to let heir halr down in the breaks herween lessons, disciplino wes atricity ubserved lessons, disciplino wos atriculy ubserved during classes. During thosa seven yeers wa never heard of a pupil being struck or roughly handled by a teachor. Most of these were women. Corporol punishment was considered to be an expression of the inability of o teacher to of a weakness for shouting o little hysteri-cally at the children. They were the least liked.

It was a paint interest for our think what we left Money as September who intring for the rwn older boys who as friendships and had come to be similar tinguisheble from their Russian class the chought in Russian, had from to sign theblas and munarisms. We had all them accorded is pat d

Then, there is tha world of pop which most classically trained musiciane would not really describe as music at all. Many muscians, like me, grew up in houses where classical music was heard all the time, so it is not surprising they failed to appreciate the difficulties children from non-musical liomes iace when they first como into con-lact with any music mora compli-cated than a simple folk tuna or the current pop hits. Even children from musical humes benefit from a from musical linnes benefit from a genue guided tour through the fields of our esoteric ort. During the years I spent as prin-cipal flatatist with the Royal Liver-pool Philliannouic Orchestra, I played at hundreds of schools' con-rests. Some were reasonably good, but most were so appallingly pre-sented and dully received by the children that I became more and more roubled by the gulf that existed between the profesional musicians, nusicologists and con-ductors who tried to present cont ductors who tried to present con-rerts, and the mass of the cloidren who made up the nudiences. I talked this over with my older collengues at the orchestre and lound that schuols concerts had not always been such no unreverding chore: In the plays when Sir Mal-cold Sargent had been the resident conductor with the RLPO, every child had gune out uf the hall with shining eves and quickened pulse— allys to the benuty of excitement of alive to the benuty of excitement of she music which "Flash" had im-parted to them with his unique chasisma. I do nut think it is altogethet a coincidence that those

I decided to italign the furnal of a nusled cutertainment for modern children which would be no excline and powers to them as excling and relovant to them as Flashe cancerts had been for the short-back-and-sides generation uf ma 1940s. With holp and advice from my television producer hits-band, I set about inventing a con-certe-or perhaps I should call it o music show-for tuday's children is enjoy.
